

The Existence of Non-Existent Avian Species in the United States

Jason Ahern

George G. Dodge Intermediate School

Author Note: This paper was prepared for Advanced Placement English Literature and Composition, taught by Ms. Milano-- It should be noted that it was written after the AP Exam. It should also be noted that this paper deliberately exploits and misrepresents some of its sources.

Abstract: Birds are not real. And I have sources to prove it too.

Fig. 1 Big Picture of Fake Bird to Fill Empty Space on Abstract Page.

Source: Youtube (Kjellberg 2018).

The Existence of Non Existent Avian Species in the United States

The bird, member of the animal kingdom and chordata phylum, has inhabited the Earth for millions of years. With nearly ten thousand distinct species, the bird class is among the most diverse on Earth. The bird has peacefully coexisted with other inhabitants of the planet for as long as it has existed; however, in recent years, it has met intense opposition from the homo sapien. This mysterious relationship between humans and birds, evident in the United States, has attracted scrutinizing attention to the reality of birds.

Although the bird has existed legitimately for millenia, its existence has recently been jeopardized in the United States-- this endangerment is not the effect of inadvertent phenomena such as global warming; instead, it is the direct result of the American government's deliberate removal of the bird from its ecosystem. This mass-extraction, however, has not been noticed by the American populace, as the government has replaced the extracted birds with robotic replicas that execute important pseudo-bureaucratic functions, such as surveillance and information-gathering. These deceptive drones, although very much resemblant of their biologically-legitimate counterparts, lack the authenticity of the birds prior to the government intrusion in the twentieth century. In today's United States, birds are not real.

Systematic Removal

The first human encroachment on the innocent bird took place in 1959, when the United States Central Intelligence Agency launched its top-secret Water the Country initiative. This intrusive plan was designed to swiftly eradicate all avian beings in the United States, led by CIA director Allen Welsh Dulles. The CIA was able to quickly erase many existing birds from the country before 1960, and "within the next 6 years, 72% of the bird population was wiped out" (McIndoe 2019). This deliberate government intrusion on the national ecosystem should easily have been obvious to the American populace, but the nation-wide overhaul of the environment went entirely unnoticed for many years. Ignorant Americans happily disregarded the replacement of the bird with enigmatic robotic drones. The Water the Country plan, although incredibly effective, was implemented through arguably unorthodox measures. The CIA refused to exterminate the nation's birds with common techniques, and instead "the targets were eradicated between 1959 and 1971 with specially altered B-52 bombers stocked with poison" (Alfonso 2019). The Central Intelligence Agency's use of this costly, unnecessary technique proves that it had the budget necessary to develop millions of bird drones. Throughout the final three decades of the twentieth century, the CIA continued its removal of the bird from the American ecosystem. In early 2001, the last bird was ceremoniously killed by CIA agents in Virginia.

Robotic Functions

Until the removal of the final bird in 2001, the millions of robotic birds released by the government solely functioned to replicate the real bird; however, the Bush Administration executed the final step in the impressive process-- it implemented the surveillance function into the existing robotic birds. But these all-seeing robots are not intended to protect Americans by providing surveillance of public locations; instead, "since 2001, the U.S. government has replaced birds with drones that spy on Americans" (Roberts 2019). Espionage of American citizens by the government blatantly violates the Fourth Amendment right to privacy, so sinister surveillance birds are inherently unconstitutional; however, the American government has disregarded this violation in favor of tightened vigilance on its citizens.

It is no surprise that the vast majority of the American populace has remained ignorant to the government's infringement on privacy since the inception of robotic bird surveillance: the robotic birds are masterfully designed to deceive Americans with realistic features. With the incredible technological advancements in recent years, along with the Central Intelligence Agency's immense budget, "these days flapping-wing 'ornithopters' are not easy to tell apart from [true] birds" (Hambling 2017). Lacking a discernible difference from authentic birds, these drones easily fly undetected by even the most careful observer. Americans, completely ignorant of the pernicious drones designed to resemble birds, are constantly being surveilled. Every bird in the United States is an instrument in the government's covert program to spy on citizens.

Revelation of Reality

Although this extensive government intrusion has been unnoticed for years, citizens are slowly uncovering the secrets of the American bird. Led mostly by young internet users, a growing movement seeks to expose the government's deception and illegal surveillance by publicizing the invalidity of birds. In fact, an immense majority of surveyed internet users have confessed their doubts with the legitimacy of the bird (see fig. 2).

Are birds real? The internet responds

BRANDWATCH REACT

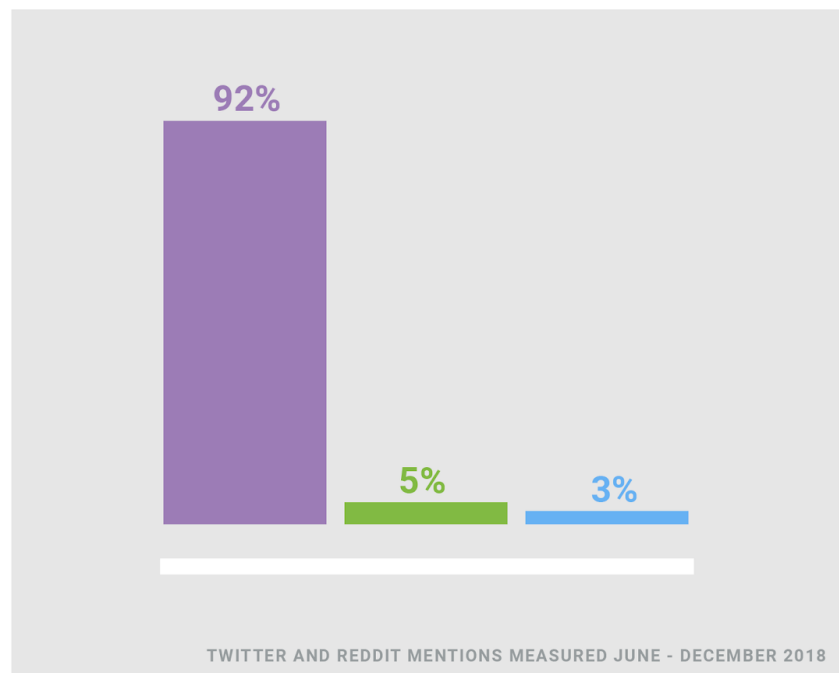

Fig. 2 Surveied Internet Users Respond to an Inquiry into the Authenticity of Birds, 2018.

Source: Brandwatch-- Data Analysis (Mulholland 2019).

This almost overwhelming majority of internet users enlightened to the falsity of avian beings demonstrates the powerful influence of the truth movement on the opinions of many. But more can be done to promote the revelation of this breach of justice to the entire American populace. As long as Americans remain complacent in their ignorance of the government's transgressions, they will also remain surveilled and subjugated by robotic birds. As "truth-seekers are discovering the harrowing reality of our avian adversaries," they must attempt to educate those unaware of the truth in order to promote societal well-being (Mulholland 2019). The truth is not refreshing or pleasant by any means; however, it is crucial that this abominable truth is exposed and recognized by all.

Conclusion

Although today's birds may seem real, they are not. The American government has systematically exterminated every bird in the United States and has replaced them with surveillance drones. These robotic creatures are strikingly realistic, but they are not authentic. This constitutional violation should be ignored no longer.

References

- Alfonso, F. (2019, January 16). Are Birds Actually Government-Issued Drones? So Says a New Conspiracy Theory Making Waves (and Money). Retrieved May 17, 2019, from <https://www.audubon.org/news/are-birds-actually-government-issued-drones-so-says-new-conspiracy-theory-making>
- Hambling, D. (2017, June 05). Area 51's Robotic Spy Bird. Retrieved May 19, 2019, from <https://www.wired.com/2007/11/its-a-bird-it/>
- Kjellberg, F. (2018, October 22). YouTube. Retrieved May 20, 2019, from <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=MMSzuqd9f68>
- McIndoe, P. (2019). The History. Retrieved May 17, 2019, from <https://birdsarentreal.com/pages/the-history>
- Mulholland, J. (2019, March 20). Data Analysis: Birds Aren't Real. Retrieved May 17, 2019, from <https://www.brandwatch.com/blog/react-birds-arent-real/>
- Roberts, R. (2019, February 9). The Bird Man. Retrieved May 17, 2019, from <https://hillmag.uark.edu/the-bird-man/>